

About Marjorie J. Albohm

Marjorie J. Albohm, MS, ATC, LAT
President, National Athletic Trainers Assn.
NATA Hall of Fame 1999

Ms. Albohm travels internationally as Manager of Fellowships and Customer Education for Ossur Americas, account manager and instructor for Speech Fitness Communications, and principal for Firm Solutions Consulting Company. She also serves on the board of directors for Datalys Sports Injury Surveillance Center, Indianapolis, IN. She is a highly regarded speaker, lecturing on a range of athletic training and sports medicine-related topics.

As a leading expert in the field of musculo-skeletal health care, Ms. Albohm's focus bridges experts and experience to advise the baby boomer generation in the prevention and management of their health care involving concerns of joints, muscles, and conditions such as osteoarthritis. The emergent field is exploding, as so many of the 60 million defy time and maintain their passion for active lifestyles beyond traditional patterns.

National and international events including the 1996 Atlanta Olympic Games, the 1991 World Gymnastics Championships, the 1988 Track and Field Olympic Trials, the 1987 Pan American Games, and the 1980 Winter Olympic Games in Lake Placid are among the venues where Ms. Albohm has served in key positions on the medical staff and coordinated medical coverage for tens of thousands of elite athletes.

Guest appearances include The Today Show, CNN House Calls with Sanjay Gupta and ESPN Real Sports with Briant Gumbel. As an expert in the field, she is quoted frequently in trade journals and consumer periodicals. She authored the book, Health Care and the Female Athlete, and co-authored Your Injury - A Common Sense Guide to Sports Injuries, and Reimbursement for Athletic Trainers.

Marjorie Albohm was one of the first women in the nation certified by the National Athletic Trainers' Association. She has received the NATA Most Distinguished Athletic Trainer Award and the Tim Kerin Award for Excellence in Athletic Training.

Spanning 35 years of service, Ms. Albohm has contributed in positions of Vice president NATA, President NATA Research and Education Foundation, Secretary/Treasurer NATA board of directors, and Director, District 4, to the NATA board of directors, and Chairperson NATA Reimbursement Advisory Group.

Marjorie J. Albohm received her BS degree from Valparaiso University and her MS degree from Indiana State University. She is former Director of Business Development and Orthopaedic Research for Orthopaedics Indianapolis and The Indiana Orthopaedic Hospital, Indianapolis, IN.

She maintains her work schedule from residences in Charleston, SC and Santa Fe, NM.
